Starting a Family and Building a Business

After graduating from college, Greenberg married his beloved wife, Helga. Together, they raised a family of three children. While working as an accountant, Greenberg identified an opportunity in the insurance industry. With a small loan from his father-in-law, he founded American International Group (AIG), a company that would go on to become one of the largest insurers in the world.

Leadership at AIG

Greenberg's leadership at AIG was visionary and audacious. He recognized the global potential of the insurance market and expanded the company's operations to over 100 countries. Under his leadership, AIG became a pioneer in new products and services, revolutionizing the way businesses managed their risks.

Philanthropy and Public Service

Beyond his business success, Greenberg was a dedicated philanthropist and public servant. He donated millions of dollars to support education, healthcare, and the arts. He also served on the boards of several prestigious institutions, including the Council on Foreign Relations and the Smithsonian Institution.

Facing Challenges and Persecution

Despite his remarkable achievements, Greenberg faced numerous challenges throughout his career. In 2005, AIG became a target of partisan attacks and political persecution. Greenberg was unjustly accused of wrongdoing and subjected to a relentless investigation that lasted for years. Through it all, he maintained his innocence and fought tirelessly to clear his name.

Redemption and Vindication

In 2014, the U.S. Department of Justice dropped all charges against Greenberg. His reputation was finally restored, and he was hailed as a victim of political persecution. Greenberg's unwavering determination and resilience had prevailed once again.
