About the Book

From the bustling streets of New York City to the windswept fields of the Great Plains, America's story is a rich and diverse tapestry woven together by the threads of countless lives.

In Out of Many, One: Step into Reading, children will embark on an extraordinary journey through the pages of American history, meeting the extraordinary individuals and witnessing the pivotal moments that have shaped our nation.

Through engaging narratives and stunning illustrations, children will learn about:

- The Pilgrims who sailed the Mayflower in search of religious freedom
- The enslaved Africans who fought for their liberty during the Civil War
- The immigrants who came from all corners of the world to build a new life in America
- The women who fought for the right to vote
- The civil rights activists who marched for equality

Out of Many, One: Step into Reading is an inspiring and accessible to American history for children ages 5-8. It is a book that celebrates the diversity of our nation and the shared experiences that unite us all.

Author's Note

I wrote Out of Many, One: Step into Reading because I believe that it is important for children to learn about the rich and diverse history of our country.

I hope that this book will inspire children to be proud of their heritage and to embrace the diversity of our nation. I also hope that it will encourage them to learn more about American history and to become active participants in shaping our future.
