Prepare to have your perspectives challenged as 'Justify This 2024' unflinchingly exposes the insidious realities of diabetes discrimination, disability, ableism, and disablism.

This groundbreaking book delves into the complex intersection of health, social justice, and human rights, shedding light on the systemic barriers and prejudice faced by individuals with diabetes and disabilities.

Diabetes Discrimination: A Prevalent Injustice

Despite being one of the most common chronic diseases globally, diabetes remains largely misunderstood and stigmatized. Individuals with diabetes often encounter discrimination in various aspects of life, including:

- Healthcare: Denial of essential medical care, limited access to treatments, and insensitive treatment by healthcare providers.
- Employment: Hiring bias, workplace harassment, and limited career advancement opportunities.
- Education: Accommodations denied or delayed, negative attitudes from educators and peers.
- Housing: Difficulty finding accessible housing, discrimination by landlords, and lack of support services.

Disability, Ableism, and Disablism: Intertwined Oppressions

Diabetes is often associated with disability, further compounding the discrimination faced by individuals with both conditions. Ableism, the systemic bias against individuals with disabilities, perpetuates negative stereotypes and limits opportunities.

Disablism, a more extreme form of ableism, dehumanizes and marginalizes individuals with disabilities. It views them as inferior, unworthy, and a burden on society.

Justify This 2024: A Call to Action

'Justify This 2024' is not just a book; it's a clarion call to action. It challenges us to:

- Recognize and challenge diabetes discrimination, ableism, and disablism.
- Advocate for policies and practices that promote inclusivity and equity for all.
- Foster a society that values and empowers individuals with diabetes and disabilities.
