From Seed to Seam: The Life of a Garment

The book traces the entire lifecycle of a garment, starting with the raw materials. From cotton fields in India to silk farms in China, we witness the labor-intensive processes involved in producing the fibers that make up our clothes.

Doe explores the environmental impact of these materials, from water consumption to chemical pollution. She reveals the hidden costs of our insatiable demand for fast fashion and disposable clothing.

The Role of Consumers and Workers

"What We Wear" also sheds light on the human toll of the fashion industry. We meet the seamstresses in Bangladeshi garment factories who toil for long hours in unsafe conditions, and the cotton farmers in Uzbekistan who face health risks due to pesticide exposure.

Doe examines the role of consumers in perpetuating unsustainable practices and challenges us to make more conscious choices about our wardrobe.

Towards a More Sustainable Future

The book concludes with an exploration of innovative solutions and sustainable practices emerging within the fashion industry. From eco-friendly materials to circular fashion models, Doe offers hope for a more responsible and ethical future.

Through extensive research and compelling storytelling, "What We Wear" provides a comprehensive understanding of the fashion industry and its implications for our planet and society.
